

Thinking Therapeutically: Proven Techniques and Case Studies in Neuro Linguistic Programming [NLP], Hypnotherapy, Imagery in Healing and Dream Interpretation for Psychology Professionals and Students

This book deserves a place in the library of all therapists whether they are seasoned or newly emerging. - Fidelity - The Journal for the National Council of Psychotherapists

Thinking Therapeutically provides a rare insight into the world of two highly experienced therapists as they recall their own enlightening journeys to becoming therapists. Tom Barber and Sandra Westland offer a number of verbatim accounts of their most memorable sessions of Hypnotherapy, NLP and Creative Imagery, along with a uniquely personal processing of each session and, more importantly, a critical analysis of each other's work. Therapists are often provided with a number of theories, approaches and techniques they are told will be therapeutic, but without any guidance as to whether they will help a particular client. This book provides an opportunity to see these ideas in action and gives some essential critique as to what did and what did not work in the sessions described. The authors offer us insight and guidance into the world of creativity which will open up to us when we engage with clients within their own paradigms. Tom and Sandra bring their own personal touch to this book, never before seen with this degree of honesty and transparency. In sharing their work they provide both new and experienced therapists with unique insights that only the seasoned practitioner can possess.
