

Life of John Coleridge Patteson: Missionary Bishop of the Melanesian Islands, Vol. 2 of 2 (Classic Reprint)

Continued. TOYAGE OF THE SEA BREEZE. The habit of writing journals was not at once resumed by Bishop Patteson when his father was not there to read them; and the chance of seeing his sisters, no doubt, made him write less fully to them, since they might be on the voyage when the letters arrived in England. Thus the fullest record of the early part of the voyage is in a report which he drew up and printed in the form of a letter to the Eev. J. Keble :W e chartered the Sea Breeze schooner in June last for four months :she is a vessel of seventy tons register, a little larger than the old Southern Cross, and as well suited for our purpose as a vessel can be which is built to carry passengers in the ordinary way. No voyage can of course equal in importance those early expeditions of the Primate, when he sailed in his little schooner among seas unknown, to islands never before visited, or visited only by the sandal-wood traders. But I never recollect myself so remarkable a voyage as this last. I do not mean that any new method was adopted in visiting islands, or communicating with the natives. God gave to the Bishop of VOL.
