

Perfect English

A Sandinista soldier hangs his Kalashnikov on a statue of a saint while children embed razor blades in green mangoes to hurl at a procession of priests. These scenes disturb Johnny Morgan when disillusioned with his cynical contemporaries at Cambridge, he follows his conscience and his American fiancée to beleaguered Nicaragua.

They have come to work for Perfect English, a Californian educational charity practising one of the more extreme expressions of liberation theology, the explosive mixture of Marxism and Christianity now sweeping the third world. English has become a new Latin: the language of technology and power and also of revolution. The only real sacrament is to help the poor. Yet Johnny finds helping is not as easy as he thinks. He is ill-prepared for the world of the Internationalista, the Left Bank champagne chic of Managuas socialist autocracy and the necessity, as a teacher, of carrying a gun. Two British funeral directors surprise him with their politically sensitive task; a representative for State Security sports peculiarly American tastes, and a Miskito Contra chief has dangerously monarchic pretensions. In this land of volcanoes and rebellion, where the inhabitants do not even trust the earth itself, Johnny begins to suspect what Perfect English is doing is far from being God's work... "Wickedly funny," • The Observer. "Brilliant," • Fiction Magazine. "Reminiscent of the early Waugh," • Irish Times.
