Author of this book invites the public, or such small percentage of the public as he may be able to reach by this book, to go back with him to the days when the forum for the discussion of all questions of importance was the grocery store; when the family coat-of-arms, the badge of respectability, the indicia of local eminence were the calfskin boot and the shaved upper lip surmounting the fan-shaped beard; when the frock coat and the stovepipe hat were the hall-marks of the professional man, as the hickory shirt, at times partly concealed by the false bosom, the paper collar, and the string tie, were of the yeo man; when the grocery store sported the sign, W. I. Goods and Groceries, and the W. I. (Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and dont occur in the book.)
