PILGRIMSTOW Market, the name given by the dwellers in Pilgrimstow to a broad street, bent like a rib of beef, in which they do then: shopping, springs unexpectedly out of the old crooked spine of the Enfield road into full modernity, and, after a busy curve of about a furlong, ends in a waste common as suddenly as it began. All the country there to the north of London, between Highgate Wood and Tottenham Cross, and from Stoke Newington on to Bowes Park and Palmer's Green, is pinched and pulled into knots and stitches of brand-new red brick and yellow.
