Ancient Poems, Ballads
and Songs of England

Robert Bell

Nor can I abide any tongues That will prattle and prate against reason, About that which doth not concern them; Which thing is no better than treason. Wherefore I wish all that do hear me Not to meddle with matters of state, Lest they be in question called for it, And repent them when it is too late. For this I will make it appear, And prove by experience I can, Tis the excellenst thing in the world To be a plain-dealing man.
