

Cloud Castle and Other Papers (Classic Reprint)

Mr. W. H. Hudson undertook to write an Introduction for this collection of essays by the late Edward Thomas. This fragment was found among his papers after his death, and is now printed as being of interest to the admirers of both these authors. THE writings of Edward Thomas are sufficiently well known to readers of recent literature, and much has been said in appreciation of his work, both prose and verse, by several of the leading critics of the time. As an admirer, I am pleased to find myself in such good company; but as a practically unlettered person this is all I can say on the subject. For me it is only to speak in this Foreword of Edward Thomas, the man, as I knew him, who was my friend and one of the most lovable beings I have ever known. It may be that our friendship was somewhat unusual, as there was a considerable difference in our respective ages, and we were poles apart in the circumstances of our lives. He, an Oxford graduate, and a literary man by profession; I, unschooled and unclassed, born and bred in a semi-barbarous district among the horsemen of the pampas.
