

Hunger (Classic Reprint)

That seemed to her to be the case as she sat, when her visitor had departed, looking on life as it had moved about her, and she saw that life had closed on her and crushed her, and that there was nothing to be said about it, and no one to be blamed. She was four years married, and she had three children. One of them had fallen when he was quite young, and had hurt his back so badly that the dispensary doctor instructed her not to let him walk for a few years. She loved all her children, but this child she loved greatly, for, of the three, she had to do the most for him. (Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and do not occur in the book.)
