

The Nihilist

The Nihilist ...where Confucius meets Camus. ~ Neil Nihilism is a young word cursed with a wrong meaning, an ugly definition. Let us correct this wayward error. Let us bestow upon this fledgling word a meaning consistent with its potential. Let us celebrate not the terror of the unknown, but the beauty of the uncharted. Step pass religion. Step pass science. Step pass existentialism. And behold the trembling wonder of ultimate freedom.

___ a small forest sought vainly to attain the horizon she stretched and reached and grew and pursued this end with utter devotion she then one day realized its futility and a terrible sadness overcame her until a bird whispered to her take from the horizon your gaze cast it instead upon yourself and so the small forest did as she was counseled she turned and looked upon herself and indeed she had grown vast and wondrous

___ an old woman was brought before the fountain of youth and did not refuse herself a drink she explained to her host: I am promised a door at the end of the path I know not what awaits me on the opposite side if anything but I know this path and I know if I journey it a second time the door will still greet me at its conclusion I think thus that I shall venture the path a second time for I am sure there is much I missed along the way a young woman viewed this scene and applauded the old woman but walked away avowing: I shall not

miss so much upon my first journey down the path for I am promised only the door and not the fountain

_____ d.hues is a reformed existentialist. On the day of his recovery, he wrote:
"Existentialists flee from nihilism. I used to flee with them.
We were running as if from a most terrible storm. But then one day" maybe from courage, maybe from curiosity, maybe from boredom "I stopped running. I stood still. And the storm overtook me. Only, it wasn't terrible and it wasn't crushing. It was more like the brief breath of laughter.
And then it was gone. And I was left standing there. And I was in a good humor. Relieved, relaxed, and free. And there was nothing left for me to do but commence walking." This work is the result of the walk that followed.
